

American Society for Reconstructive Microsurgery

Medical Student Annual Meeting Scholarship

The American Society for Reconstructive Microsurgery's purpose of existence is to promote, encourage, foster and advance the art and science of microsurgical and other complex reconstructions. To do this the organization has established a forum for teaching, research and free discussion of reconstructive microsurgical methods and principles. Yearly, the ASRM holds a scientific annual meeting which has a longstanding tradition of presenting cutting edge topics in microsurgery, panel discussions and instructional courses applicable to the clinician as well as the researcher.

The American Society for Reconstructive Microsurgery is committed to investing in the future of microsurgery. Therefore, this year the ASRM is implementing a scholarship program to assist medical students that want to attend the annual meeting. To qualify medical students must:

- be a medical student at the time of the meeting
- not be presenting during the meeting
- have a letter of support from their Program Director
- be granted time away from rotation to attend meeting

This scholarship covers the costs associated with meeting registration and 3 night's hotel lodging at the host hotel. Travel and additional expenses are the responsibility of the student or institution.

The 2010 Annual Meeting will include the highly regarded Drs. Paul Farmer, John Fildes, Yur-Ren Kuo and Susumu Tamai as invited speakers. Dr. Lawrence Gottlieb will preside over the 2010 Master Series which will consist of an international panel of renowned masters of microsurgery highlighting complications and problems they have experienced. This meeting will be held at the Boca Raton Resort in Boca Raton, Florida, January 9-12th.
